Field of the Invention This invention relates to a method for making an optical lens of a plastic, and, more particularly, to a method for making an optical lens of plastic that has uniform density of the plastic and is free of scratches. 2. Description of the Related Art Referring to FIGS. 1 and 2, a conventional method for making an optical lens of plastic includes the following steps: a. Firing a flat plastic blank 1 into a molding machine, the flat plastic blank 1 having a plurality of convex lens portions 2 thereon, so that the flat plastic blank 1 is molded into a desired shape. b. Submerging the molding product 3 out of the molding machine into a liquid or medium of softness, so that the molding product 3 becomes soft. c. Removing the plastic blank 1 with the convex lens portions 2 thereon, from the liquid or medium of softness, and then cooling the convex lens portions 2 of the plastic blank 1. d. Then, grinding the convex lens portions 2 of the plastic blank 1 into a desired shape. e. Submerging the plastic blank 1 having the ground convex lens portions 2 into the liquid or medium of softness, so that the convex lens portions 2 are re-expanded. f. Removing the plastic blank 1 with the convex lens portions 2 thereon, from the liquid or medium of softness. g. Submerging the plastic blank 1 having the convex lens portions 2 thereon, into a mixture of organic liquid, water and ferric chloride and then centrifuging the mixture of the organic liquid, water and ferric chloride at high speed so that the organic liquid is removed and ferric chloride is moved to the inner of the organic liquid, thereby causing a ferric chloride film layer to form on the plastic blank 1. h. Then, polishing the plastic blank 1 having the ferric chloride film layer thereon, into a desired shape. As shown in FIGS. 1 and 2, the conventional method for making an optical lens of plastic includes the following
