To investigate the clinical significance of serum anti-Mullerian hormone (AMH) in infertile patients with poor ovarian response (POR). Seventy infertile patients with POR undergoing their first cycle of controlled ovarian hyperstimulation (COH) and undergoing IVF treatment between April 2011 and March 2013 were enrolled. Thirty patients with good response (POR-G) served as the study group, while the other 40 patients with poor response (POR-F) served as the control group. Serum concentrations of AMH were measured with ELISA. The clinical pregnancy rate (CPR), implantation rate (IR), and live birth rate (LBR) per embryo transfer (ET) were recorded. The serum AMH level was significantly lower in the POR-F group than in the POR-G group [(0.95 ± 0.28) µg/L vs. (2.58 ± 0.91) µg/L, P
